

“Designers drive the process. They have the unique ability to bring interior spaces up to a level beyond that of architecture. The goal is always fresh tracks in new snow, the evolution of signature style.”

—Daryl Evans

ABOVE: The center table features a sunburst figured walnut top supported by a fluted column, complete with gilded trim. Table leafs allow for expansion if desired. Table design by William Hodgins, Inc.

FACING PAGE: We collaborated with the interior designer to create a Regency desk for a Boston penthouse. Details such as the antique leather top with blind tooling and gilded brass mouldings and mounts make the mahogany desk more decorative than functional. Overlooking a magnificent view of the city, it's the perfect spot for writing postcards. Desk design by William Hodgins, Inc.

“Science can put a man on the moon but sooner or later he’ll need a table. That’s a job we’ll definitely bid on.”

—Richard Hulme

ABOVE: Constructed from walnut and yew wood with gold leaf gilded trim, a gentleman’s study takes inspiration from an antique French bibliothèque. A triple band of mouldings establishes the architrave for the floor-to-ceiling paneling, giving the space a regal, yet warm feel. Study design by Saffron House, Inc.

FACING PAGE TOP: A traditional multiuse wall unit reaches 11 feet toward the ceiling, as it serves as a desk, an entertainment center, and a storage piece. Bifold doors in the center mask a flat-screen television, while a drop-down lid camouflages a workspace and the bottom compartments conceal media equipment. Carefully placed ventilation and wire passage were key in the design, which features oak with an antique limed finish. Wall unit design by John Berenson Interior Design.

FACING PAGE BOTTOM: Crystal display cabinets outfitted with antique mirror and antique leaded glass accented by silver-leaf caming illuminate the corner of a Boston brownstone. The built-in pieces reach 10 feet, as they feature marble tops and crotch mahogany panels. Cabinet design by Dell Mitchell Architects and Manuel de Santaren Interior Design.
